OUR HISTORY

It was right in Parma, in 781 A.D., where Charlemagne and the monk Alcuin of York met to lay the foundations for the rebirth of the Palatine School: this was the first important citation of the cultural vocation of the city and its higher education activities. With an imperial decree dated 13th March 962 AD, Emperor Otto I conferred on Uberto, the Bishop of Parma, the power to order and elect legal leaders, allowing them to exert their authority throughout the Empire.

SIGNIFICANT FOR GREAT PERSONALITIES

A number of important professors and students chose to study in Parma as far back as the 11th and 12th centuries; to name but a few, the theologian San Pier Damiani or the monk Donizone. The prestige of Parma further lasted for the following centuries: even the famous poet Petrarch sent his son to study there. Parma has been a "celebrated seat of learning" since the 11th century, attracting students from countries beyond the Alps. Sinibaldo dei Fieschi and Simone de Brion studied in Parma before becoming, respectively, Pope Innocent IV and Pope Martin IV. In the 16th century the House of Farnese founded in Parma one of the most prestigious University colleges ever seen in Italy. In the 18th century Parma welcomed some distinguished scholars like the Illuminist philosopher Condillac, while in the early 19th century its popularity was so high that Napoleon extended its jurisdiction as far as Alessandria.

THE CITY

A FRIENDLY CITY AND A HIGH QUALITY OF LIVING

Busy but not chaotic, tidy but not boring, Parma is a perfect combination of beauty and efficiency: a pleasant medium-sized city of about 200.000 inhabitants where riding a bicycle is the ideal way to get around.

The high quality of living in Parma is immediately perceivable and the University perfectly takes part in this favourable mix of florid economic activities, especially the remarkable food industry and the typical pleasure for life of the inhabitants of Emilia-Romagna. Parma has received many awards in recent years: Since 2003, it has been the seat of the European Food Safety Authority (EFSA). Since 2015, it has been named the "Creative City for Gastronomy", a title awarded by UNESCO; in 2020 and 2021, Parma was chosen to be the "Italian Capital of Culture" and in 2027 will be the European Youth Capital.

RESEARCH

SCIENTIFIC RESEARCH ACTIVITIES OF WORLD EXCELLENCE

Today, more than ever, “innovation” is one of the keywords of the University of Parma.

Within the structures of the University of Parma there are scientific research activities of world excellence. The research areas range from agri-food to biotechnology, from pharmaceutical innovation to experimental medicine, not to mention the importance of studies in the legal, economic, humanistic, engineering, architectural and veterinary medical fields. Among the excellences, we must not forget the discoveries on the “mirror neurons” in the area of Neuroscience, the studies in Information Engineering that led to the creation of autonomous vehicles (without a driver), the studies in the field of mathematics and those in the food sector, in which the University of Parma - also thanks to its position in the center of the Food Valley - aims to consolidate its status as a reference point, not only at a regional level.

TECNOPOLO AND APPLIED RESEARCH

Another fundamental element of the University of Parma is the activity carried out within the Tecnopolo, where both the applied research of the interdepartmental centers and the research “labs” of University partner companies can develop, within a Campus which is the heart of innovation for the whole area.

EU GREEN ALLIANCE

“EU GREEN - European University Alliance for Sustainability, Responsible Growth, Inclusive Education and Environment” is an EU alliance approved in the framework of the European Universities action”. The aim is the creation of a European higher-education space that prioritises sustainability in all its dimensions (teaching, research, third mission, student life and internationalisation): a network that aims to better serve students and their respective territories by working together to increase and promote sustainability and address the main societal challenges identified in the United Nations Sustainable Development Goals (SDGs), fostering the growth of a more equitable society and the development of a more balanced economy and a more sustainable environment

FOOD PROJECT

The Food Project is an initiative promoted by the University of Parma with the aim of harmonizing and strengthening the skills and the competences which already exist within the University, in terms of research and teaching, in the food sector. It strives to promote scientific interaction among universities, industries, research centres, and with national and international educational institutions. The goal is to make the University of Parma a recognized European hub in the field of food technology and nutrition.
